foxycart!

is not

An all-in-one solution to your e-commerce problems, nor is it a turnkey solution that does a half-assed job at a little of everything. It's not a CMS or email marketing system. It doesn't handle analytics, accounting, or inventory. And it won't do your laundry.

FoxyCart is not a jack of all trades.
It is a master of one: the cart+checkout flow.

is

An e-commerce platform that does one thing only, but does so in a way that's intuitive, usable, and powerful. It's built to integrate seamlessly into your existing designs and functionality. It's a new tool, not a whole new toolbox.

for designers

- Use your own designs, and even your own templates. FoxyCart will automatically and securely cache your existing templates, allowing you to use the HTML+CSS you already have.

- It's easy even for non-programmers. If you can create a link or a form, you can use FoxyCart to serve your clients in previously impossible ways.

- Serve your clients without relearning your craft, and add value to your services.

for merchants

- Sell anything: physical, intangible, downloadables, donations, registrations, subscriptions and more.

- Sell more and convert more visits to sales with FoxyCart's uniquely optimized 1-page checkout.

- Focus on your core competencies and reduce your TCO and time to market by reducing liability, PCI compliance, system admin + maintenance, data security, and other requirements. *

for developers

- It's built to integrate, and there's plenty of power under the hood like instant XML datafeeds, API access, Single Sign-On, full JSONP control, complete recurring billing support, and more.

- Flexibility without frustration. If you can build the product order form, FoxyCart can likely handle the products.

- Focus on what you enjoy, because that's probably not PCI compliance, 3rd party integrations, redundant infrastructure, and security patches.

*Excellent and totally makes sense.
FoxyCart is one of a kind and* solved every challenge I had, even the ones I didn't know I would have.

*Using FoxyCart may not completely eliminate requirements like PCI DSS, but it will likely greatly reduce the cost and time associated with many of them.

I found foxycart by searching "xhtml e commerce" and you guys were the first result. I figured that if I could find an e commerce solution focused on standards, odds are it wouldn't have massive heaps of code to sort through and trim down. What I found was even better.

As an aside, I love this cart. When you sent me that link, I realized foxycart really is the only checkout that I don't simply dread using… and actually enjoy the process of buying something.

foxycart FTW… that is all   – @joshku... via twitter

I have to say that the way you handle your company has really astounded me. Especially with this issue, you really went the extra mile (or 20).

I want to say that using your service has been a pleasure. I've developed sites on a few e-commerce platforms, and yours has been the most straightforward to implement by far.

You may or may not have noticed but [our store name] just reactivated our FoxyCart account. Back in May we stopped using FC because we hired a web development company to redo our site and they were going to provide us with a custom cart. Well, on Friday they still hadn't delivered anything usable after three months of promises and left us in a do or die situation, where we had to sell a large portion of our inventory over the weekend or we were going to run out of cash on Monday. So I slapped together the FC system and our General Counsel wrote a program that feeds our order information to our warehouse in about 4 hours. We sold more than enough inventory to keep the company solvent in 24 hours. FoxyCart totally saved my butt, my business, investors and suppliers from certain disaster, so I just wanted to say "thanks".
